It is said that da Ponte based his libretto for Così fan Tutte on a real-life incident which had once been the talk of Vienna. Two young officers (Ferrando and Guglielmo), confident of the constancy of the sisters to whom they are engaged (Dorabella and Fiordiligi), engage in a bet with an older bachelor friend (Don Alfonso), a wily philosopher who maintains that women's fidelity is not quite the sturdy fortress they imagine it to be. Don Alfonso, with the help of Despina, the sisters' maid, introduces them to two "Albanians" - the disguised Ferrando and Guglielmo. The second act of the opera finds Despina encouraging the sisters to receive the Albanians and enjoy "an innocent diversion to while away the tedious time of waiting".

In the first scene of the opera, Don Giovanni has attempted to seduce Donna Anna. Her father, the Commendatore, has challenged the libertine to a duel and has lost his life. Don Giovanni and Leporello, his servant, have gone on to further adventures and have come upon the wedding celebration of Zerlina and Masetto. Leporello distracts Masetto and Don Giovanni makes overtures to Zerlina only to be interrupted by Donna Elvira, his abandoned wife. As Don Giovanni attempts to placate the furious lady, Donna Anna and Don Ottavio appear bent on vengeance. Not realizing that Don Giovanni is indeed her attacker and the murderer of her father, Donna Anna enlists his aide in spite of the imprecations of Donna Elvira.

Near the village with its crabbed inhabitants and the farm yard where domestic animals exist in a bewildered panic, stands the forest. In the forest, the animals, birds and insects lead short but joyous lives: their rapture is beyond human experience. Only the forester, as an observer, has an understanding of nature untouched by man. The more human traits Janáček gives his animals the more distinct they seem from human.

In Act II of The Cunning Little Vixen, the vixen and fox meet and are immediately attracted. The vixen, demure and alluring yet independant, tells the fox her ferocious, savage experiences as captive of the forester. The fox formally introduces himself then goes to kill a rabbit for her.

After the fox's ecstatic prediction that men will write novels and operas about the vixen, their passion is given free rein. Prudish forest creatures are shocked and the vixen leads the fox to her den. Within moments it is clear that cubs are waiting to be born and the fox and vixen marry in the forest. A joyous little dance ends the act.

Der Waffenschmied was first performed on May 30, 1846 at the Theater an der Wien, Vienna, with Lortzing as librettist, composer and conductor. Its success gained Lortzing a permanent post at the theatre. With such works as Zar und Zimmermann, Der Wildschütz and Der Waffenschmied, Lortzing's name became synonymous with German comic opera and these works hold a firm place in the repertory today. Lortzing was careful to give his villains and heroes alike a naturalness far removed from the romantic fantasy-filled operas of Weber and Marschner. Der Waffenschmied is made up of arias, duets and ensembles divided by dialogue and Act I ends, not with a grand ensemble as one might expect, but with a wistful and extended scene for soprano alone.

Count von Liebenau has fallen in love with Marie, daughter of the armourer Hans Stadinger. To win Marie's love, von Liebenau has disguised himself as an apprentice, Konrad, and she has indeed fallen in love with him. Now to test her constancy he will court her in his true persona, Count von Liebenau. Marie's governess, Irmentraut, bemoans the ways of the world in words and music highly reminiscent of Berta's aria in the Barber of Seville. To the dismay of Irmentraut and pretended despair of von Liebenau, Marie displays no interest in him whatever. Georg, von Liebenau's squire, and also in Stadinger's employ in disguise, comes to warn them that Stadinger is on his way home. Stadinger, who loathes the aristocracy, organizes a useless search for the Count. He notices that Konrad is missing but Georg tells him Konrad is in his room and has slept through this noisy episode. Left alone, Marie realizes that, much as the Count has impressed her, Konrad's love is worth more to her than wealth, a crown and estates.

The familiar opening scene of Humperdinck's masterpiece speaks for itself; two poverty-stricken children abandon their assigned chores in favour of a livelier pastime. The characteristics of the entire score are present from the opening bars – a deceptively simple folk-like musical atmosphere is supported by a harmonic and contrapuntal fabric of almost Wagnerian ingenuity and complexity.
